Mostly-blind man fatally shot by Roy officer

ROY — A man fatally shot by a Roy police officer was almost blind, spoke no English and probably never understood orders to drop the knife he was holding, according to his family.

Phu Ly, 65, was killed at his home by an officer responding to a domestic dispute on Friday.

Ly's daughter, Duyen Ly, 27, said her father was shot before she could translate the officer's orders, according to Tam T. Huynh, publisher of the Utah-Idaho Viet News.

Authorities say two officers went to the home shortly after 2:30 p.m. to answer a neighbor's report that a man beat up a woman, chased her outside the house with a broomstick and then forced her screaming back inside.

Roy Lt. Ed Rhoades said that when the officers knocked on the door they were met by the woman, but the man was standing at the top of the stairs with a knife.

Rhoades said the man ignored orders to drop the knife. The officer fired three times as the man lifted the knife as if he was going to throw it, the lieutenant said.

Odometer tampering complaints on the rise

WASHINGTON — Odometer tampering, the bane of used car buyers, has increased dramatically in the last year, apparently because professional fraud artists are proliferating.

"We're just swamped with work," said Richard Morse, chief of odometer fraud investigation for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. "I've been managing this program since 1978, and it's the worst I've ever seen it."

Morse said complaints from consumers, dealers, auctioneers and state police investigators have doubled because odometer tampering rings are getting larger. The practice of lowering a car's apparent mileage costs consumers up to $10 billion annually, according to Morse's agency.

Large rings roll back odometers on 500 to 1,000 cars a year, he estimated. One so-called "clocker" admitted in court last year to rolling back 1,600 odometers.

End-of-summer blues can dampen holiday fun

LAYTON — While most Utah residents were spending Labor Day picnicking, camping or just relaxing, others were dealing with the blues brought on by the end of summer.

Dr. David Newbold, a psychologist with Behavioral Health Services Inc. here, said although neither common nor serious, end-of-the-summer depression can affect everyone in some form.

For many, an increased stress level is a result of school starting and work routine cranking back up.

"People start getting back into the hectic pace of things," Newbold said. "Make sure you take a little extra time to work something enjoyable into your weekly or daily schedule."

Children probably get hit the hardest, so Newbold advised: "Make sure they take a break and stay focused on enjoyable things."

Ogden City Schools spokeswoman Debbie Hefner said student counselors treat the post-Labor Day blues the same way they treat other problems.

Increase in TB cases credited to better testing

SALT LAKE CITY — Public health workers are not sure what has caused a recent surge in the number of tuberculosis cases in Utah, but say it could be due to better screening.

So far this year, 41 cases of TB have been reported, including an unusual spurt of 18 during April.

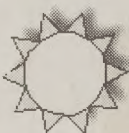

By late August last year, only 24 cases had been reported, although the 1995 total grew to 48, according to the Utah Department of Health.

Peg Sower, the department's TB nurse consultant, is not certain if the apparent increase is due to more testing, more disease or just a random fluctuation in numbers.

TB is caused by a bacterium that is inhaled and invades the lungs, but may not cause noticeable illness. From the lungs, the germs can travel to many parts of the body, including the lymph nodes, kidney and spine. There, the bacteria can lie dormant for years, awakening only when the body's defenses become weakened.

In most cases, antibiotic drug treatment is effective. But without treatment, the bacterium destroys tissue.

Five children shot in Arizona; Father accused of murders

Associated Press

WINDOW ROCK, Ariz. — The father of five children was arrested Monday in a small Navajo Reservation community after he allegedly shot and killed four of them and critically wounded the fifth, authorities said.

No motive was immediately evident, said David Nez, director of the Navajo Division of Public Safety.

The shooting occurred late Sunday night in a trailer owned by the arrested man, Norman Yazzie, 33, in the small reservation community of Dinnehotso in northeastern Arizona, officials said.

"He also tried to set the trailer on fire after he shot the children," FBI spokesman Jack Callahan said from Phoenix.

Nez said investigators had not figured out a motive for the shootings, but it appeared each victim had been shot more than once, possibly in bed or while watching television.

Relatives found the victims' bodies and summoned authorities after seeing smoke coming from the trailer, Nez said.

A search by Navajo police turned up Yazzie in a nearby hogan, a traditional Navajo dwelling, Nez said.

When confronted by officers, Yazzie lunged at them with a knife before being taken into custody, Nez said. None of the officers were injured.

Law enforcement officials said the wounded boy, 11-year-old Ryan Yazzie, was hospitalized in critical condition at the Flagstaff hospital but that could not be confirmed immediately.

Names of the dead children, ages 7 to 15, were not released immediately.

Callahan said he did not know whether Yazzie is married, but Nez said the children's mother had been flown from Aztec, N.M., where she was visiting, to Flagstaff to be with the surviving boy.

Callahan said investigators reported that the gun used was a .22-caliber rifle but that he could not confirm that the weapon was recovered.

Yazzie was being transported to Flagstaff where he was to appear later Monday before a federal magistrate on suspicion of four counts of murder and one of attempted murder, Callahan said.

The FBI has jurisdiction along with tribal authorities because the slayings involved felonies committed on an Indian reservation.

"He also tried to set the trailer on fire after he shot the children."

Excellence in Teaching Conference

for part-time faculty and teaching assistants

Saturday September 7, 1996

8 a.m. – 1 p.m.

JSB Auditorium

Lunch will be served

Sponsored by the

BYU

Faculty Center

This half-day fall conference is organized to provide instruction and support for all BYU teaching assistants and – for the first time this fall – part-time faculty. After an opening presentation, panels made up of experienced teaching assistants and part-time faculty will take questions on topics related to teaching excellence. Concurrent workshops will then be offered on a number of topics.

completely wrong up close. The student officers were sure a mistake had been made and wanted no part of it.

Elmer Jacobs, then student body president, persuaded the students otherwise and the work began. Although the workers were filled with enthusiasm for the project, it was a much bigger job than they had anticipated. At the end of the day the "Y" had been covered by only a thin layer and the "B" and the "U" had yet to be started. Several boys had fainted and had to be carried down the hill.

After three years of inaction, it was decided to leave the "Y" by itself and abandon all further attempts to complete the other two letters. The student has since been the center of BYU traditions, including the lighting of the "Y".

"Y Day" consisted of participation by all male students in the painting of the "Y". Even of this activity fell under the quasi-official "Benevolent Hair Removers From Sluffers".

After intervention by the Police in 1912 on behalf of a man who refused to have shaved, Brimhall put an end to the practice.

Scripture of the Day

"And I soon go to the place of my rest, which is with my Redeemer; for I know that in him I shall rest. And I rejoice in the day when my mortal shall put on immortality, and shall stand before him; then shall I see his face with pleasure, and he will say unto me: Come unto me, ye blessed, there is a place prepared for you in the mansions of my Father."

Home-buying tips help students save money, find dream homes

Learn realtor jargon, determine price range before starting search

By V. CURTIS LARSEN
Universe Staff Writer

Most BYU students hope to own a home one day, but first-time homebuyers are usually unaware of the process involved in purchasing a home and that can cost them dearly.

Buying a home can be a great experience if you know what you are doing," said Chuck O'Brien Sr., principal broker for ReMax Realty of Provo.

What are the steps to buying a home? Examining the process will help BYU students understand that the pit of rent can be escaped.

First-time home-buyers should know what they are looking for before buying a home. There are many types of housing out there: Townhouses, patio homes, condominiums and mobile homes.

The Betty Crocker book, "Starting Out," a guide for first-time homebuyers, states: "Close your eyes and daydream about your first home. This kind of daydreaming is valuable because it begins to bring into focus the kind of surroundings you want to live with."

First-time shoppers of any product should know what they are looking for, especially when it involves a big investment like a home, states "Starting Out."

Knowing the "Realtor (home-seller) jargon" is very important before shopping for a home, said Elliott Larsen, a real-estate agent from Idaho. It helps to avoid confusion, manipulation and false information.

Most people do not pay cash for their homes, said Brian Pettit, a mortgage officer in Provo. Homes are financed by means of a mortgage.

A mortgage is a loan from a lending institution which puts up the desired home as security or collateral, Pettit said. If payments are not received, the lending institution can take possession of the property.

According to "Starting Out," money is one of the biggest considerations when buying a home. Prospective buyers should know the desired price range and should not exceed their limit. To be safe, 20 to 30 percent of net income should be set aside for house payments.

Furthermore, substantial funds must be set aside for the down payment and closing costs. "The down payment and closing costs should account for at least 5 to 10 percent of the price of the home," said Shannon Sleenor, a mortgage officer for Atherton Mortgage in Provo.

The desired price range is $90,000 to $100,000 then $4,500 to $10,000 should be set aside for the down payment and closing costs, she said.

To aid in figuring a rough estimate of monthly house payments, "Starting Out" recommends a simple process — "Take a purchase price that is possible, subtract the amount of the down payment and closing costs (10 percent of the purchase price) and then take 1 percent of that number as a guide."

For a house costing $100,000 would include a $10,000 down payment/closing cost expense. Subtract $10,000 from $100,000 and take 1 percent of that amount and the rough estimate of monthly housing expenses comes to $900.

The interest rate is an important determinant when buying a home, Sleenor said. "It is better to buy a home when interest rates are really low, thus decreasing the overall payments."

"Starting Out" suggests calling a bank and getting the interest rate

If you're planning to buy a home...

- Know what type of housing you are looking for before you begin your search.

- Know your desired price range and don't exceed it.

- Call a bank to find out the current interest rate.

- Be sure you can qualify for a loan.

graphic by Josh Smith

before looking for a home. "Longer-term mortgages have a lower monthly payment but more money is spent in the long run." The interest rate is used to help determine the monthly payment.

For example, $10,000 financed with an 8 percent interest rate paid over a 15-year period would amount to a monthly payment of $95.57. The same mortgage over a 25-year period would amount to a monthly payment of $90.88, but the total dollar amount paid on the 15-year loan is $6,555 less than the amount paid on the 25-year mortgage, states "Starting Out."

"Certain criteria must be met by the applicant before he or she can get a loan," Sleenor said. The mortgage company will look at the credit history of the applicant. The applicant must have a good credit history before he or she can get a loan, she said.

Mortgage companies also check to see how long the loan applicant has held his current job, Sleenor said. "We require at least two years either in the job field or on the current job."

She said that the applicant must also have a low debt-to-income ratio before obtaining a loan. "We want to make sure the applicant can easily make the monthly payments on the mortgage," Sleenor said.

There are many different types of loans — FHA, VA and Conventional loans, said Joel Buxton, a loan officer for First Security Mortgage. "Each type of loan has different criteria that must be met by the applicant. The loan officer will find the loan that best fits within the applicant's financial boundaries."

"First-time home-buyers should first contact a mortgage company to see if they can buy a house or not," O'Brien said. "It is a tremendous let-down if people start looking at homes they want and then find out they can't qualify for a loan."

After the money concerns are resolved, buyers should check out the surrounding areas and decide upon the desired living area. "Starting Out" recommends, "Look for essential services and conveniences — the 'availables' that make the difference between easy living and a daily hassle with homemaking needs."

"Look for 'extras' too — entertainment facilities, special interest shops, landscape features — things that will add to your enjoyment of the area." Examples of these are supermarkets, schools, drugstores and dry cleaners, states "Starting Out."

Safety factors should also be considered before buying a home, said Bill Critchfield, a Realtor for MANSELL Realty in Orem. "Questions concerning crime rates, public transportation and pollution problems should all be answered. This ensures a safe environment enjoyable for a long time."

According to "Starting Out," it is very important to evaluate how much room is needed to accommodate family and lifestyle. When looking for a home to raise an entire family, plan ahead and determine how much space is needed. This will avoid decisions to later increase living space.

"Make sure you decide on the size of home you are looking for before you even start looking," Critchfield said. "This helps to focus efforts and helps the Realtors know how to best meet needs."

Determine those things which are most important — size of kitchen, bathrooms and bedrooms, he said. Identifying needs and wants will save a lot of time.

"Know the local market," said Philip Hinkley, a Realtor for Hinkley Realty in Orem. Different areas have different costs of living. Home prices will vary from city to city — this can be a key element in deciding where to buy a home.

Hinkley said that many supermarkets carry home-buyer magazines that help first-time home-buyers establish the price range of the local market.

Calling a Realtor is the next step to take after all the preparation, Buxton said. Realtors act as the "middle-man" between buyers and sellers. Realtors can help home buyers find the home that they want.

According to "Starting Out," "Buyers that know what they want before the purchase need only tell the Realtor — the Realtor will then find a home that meets those needs."

The Realtor works at no cost at all to the buyer, O'Brien said. The Realtor will simply aid the buyer to find a seller. The seller bears the costs for the Realtor.

Student pay schedule to change to biweekly

By CARMEN DURLAND
Universe Staff Writer

BYU's payroll system is changing payday from the 9th and 24th of each month to every other Monday, beginning Sept. 9.

The Sept. 9 paycheck will pay for all employment between Aug. 16 and Saturday, as usual for the semi-monthly pay schedule, said Penny Morrell, manager of student employment.

The new biweekly pay schedule will begin a week later with the Sept. 16 paycheck.

This paycheck will cover Sept. 1 through the sixth. Employees on an hourly time card will be paid just for that week's work.

However, "students working on contracts receive an equal amount of money for all of the pay periods during the time they work," she said. Thus, wherever their employment falls within the pay period, employees on contract will receive a paycheck, regardless of whether they worked one week instead of two.

Paychecks will then be issued every two weeks, the next payday being Sept. 30. Any employee with questions can call Morrell at 378-6926.

The payroll system was changed for several reasons. In a letter to staff, R. Blair Condie, assistant administrative vice president for Human Resource Services, said, "the current system pays staff employees twice a month. This has been somewhat awkward for our employees for a variety of reasons."

"For example, if an employee works additional hours in the pay period, under the current system it is impossible to know whether those hours should be counted and paid as overtime until the end of the workweek. Since the pay period often ends during the week, it has been very difficult to calculate and pay for overtime work."

"In instances where an employee may only work a partial pay period, it has been difficult to calculate and explain the amount of money earned, since pay periods do not have an equal number of days. ... Because of these and other issues, it was determined that it would facilitate the payroll process and be beneficial to employees to change to a biweekly system."

Condie also said that employees would receive 26 paychecks per year instead of 24. "Because of the additional two checks per year, each check will be slightly smaller than under the current system. ... While each check will be slightly smaller, it is important to understand that annual pay will not be less," he said.

Over the summer

Aug. 29 — A crazed lunatic shot two Utah teens near Little Dell Reservoir. One died at the scene, the other is in stable condition at a local hospital.

Aug. 24 — BYU defeated Texas A&M 41-37 and boosted its ranking to 19th nationally. At the game, BYU quarterback Steve Sarkisian completed 33 of 44 passes for 356 yards.

Aug. 14 — An anonymous accuser charged BYU President Merrill J. Bateman of plagiarism in his commencement address. Bateman responded by saying "there was no intent to plagiarize."

Aug. 8 — The Mount Timpanogos Utah Temple opened to the public in American Fork. It will be The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints' 49th operating temple after its dedication in October.

Aug. 7 — Low temperatures helped firefighters make headway against forest and range fires that have burned more than 170,000 acres throughout Utah this summer.

July 30 — Pending additions to the Lee Library forced the relocation of the Tree of Wisdom from the ASB Quad to the area southwest of the Kimball Tower.

July — Workers began dismantling the Wyview Trailer Park to make room for construction of a 426-unit apartment complex.

June 29 — Pres. Gordon B. Hinckley rededicated This is the Place State Park. The recently completed Old Deseret Village at the park includes 28 restored or recreated buildings.

June 25 — Chris Cannon defeated Tom Drachill in the 3rd Congressional District Republican Primary.

June 11 — The university dismissed assistant English professor Gail Houston. The faculty member held controversial opinions on feminism and praying to a Mother in Heaven.

May 30 — BYU officials announced plans to search for more efficient uses of BYU's campus resources, including construction of satellite campuses and conducting courses over the Internet.

May 16 — Utah highway officials increased speed limits from 55 mph to 75 mph on some state highways.

May 10 — The Hong Kong Temple of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints opened to the public. It is the Church's 48th operating temple, and will be the only temple in a Communist country after Hong Kong goes under Chinese control next year.

Add, drop classes early to avoid paying fees

By JENNIFER ABSHER
Universe Staff Writer

Arranging the perfect class schedule often requires more work than just registering for classes through the telephone registration system. The first day of classes rolls around and you have one class you need to add but can only take it at 1 p.m., the only time the class is full. What do you do?

To register or make class changes after school begins requires using an add/drop card. These cards are available beginning the first day of classes in the Joseph F. Smith Family Living Center, college advisement centers, and the Registration Office.

You must fill out the information for the class you need and obtain the signature of the teacher of that class before you turn in the card to the step-down lounge in the S between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. during the first ten days of classes.

Not all classes require an add/drop card. Some classes may be added using the telephone registration system, the AIM terminals found throughout the campus. The BYU Fall 1996 Class Schedule lists where you can find AIM terminals and which classes require an add/drop card and which do not.

Students wishing to drop a class without a fee must do so during the first two days of the semester. They may use AIM terminals, touch-tone telephone system, or an add/drop card. From Sept. 5 through Sept. 16, students must use an add/drop card to drop a class and fees begin at $3 per class and increase $1 each day until the total reaches a maximum of $10 per class.

President and Sister Merrill J. Bateman

Elder Merrill J. Bateman, a member of the Church's First Quorum of the Seventy, became BYU's 11th president on January 1, 1996. Formerly the Church's Presiding Bishop, Elder Bateman is married to Marilyn Scholes Bateman. They are parents of seven children and grandparents of 20.

President Bateman brings to his new position a background of strong administrative and academic experience.

Prior to his call as a General Authority, Elder Bateman headed his own consulting and capital management companies. He earlier served as dean of the College of Business and the School of Management (now the Marriott School of Management) at BYU.

Before joining BYU's faculty, he was an executive with Mars, Inc., in England and in the United States.

President and Sister Bateman attended American Fork High School together. Sister Bateman is a Logan, Utah, native who grew up in American Fork and later attended BYU and the U of U.

President Bateman earned a bachelor's degree in economics at the U of U and a doctorate in the same subject from MIT. He was an Air Force Academy instructor early in his academic career.

President Bateman has served the Church as a missionary, ward bishop, stake high counselor, stake president, and regional representative.

Pres. Bateman outlines goals at Annual Conference

By JANNA NIELSEN
Universe Staff Writer

President Bateman discussed five broad-of-Trustees-approved goals that range from building on a religious foundation to sharpening the university's institutional focus at the Aug. 29 morning session of the Annual University Conference.

These goals are designed to guide the actions of BYU administration and personnel as plans are implemented to improve the future of the university, President Bateman said.

They include 1) building on the religious foundation of BYU, 2) improving the educational opportunities of students, 3) strengthening teaching, 4) improving communication between faculty and administrators, and 5) sharpening the institutional focus.

President Bateman addressed each specifically and posed questions to faculty, staff and administrators that will help them better understand the aims of this plan.

He first asked, "Can the sacred portion of the university education be improved?"

It must be, he said, and successful scholars will learn to integrate the secular and the divine as they instruct students.

His second question encompassed the concern he feels for freshmen who get lost in large classes and an array of unknown faculty members.

He said that both "qualitative and quantitative data suggests that too many students become lost (during their) freshman year."

"Regular faculty rarely teach 100-level classes," he said. If they do, the classes are large and many students chose not to come to these classes.

To solve these problems and improve the education of BYU students, he proposed that professorships be established for senior faculty to teach 100-level classes.

He also said that money for more faculty members will come from the funds raised by the Capital Campaign.

As faculty members work to improve the education of students, the third goal will also be accomplished. This goal entails "keeping research on an upward momentum while strengthening teaching," President Bateman said.

"Research is complementary to, not in competition with, teaching."

He promised that the upward thrust of research will continue, but reminded faculty that "this institution is a teaching university."

He described two types of ineffective faculty: "the teacher who hasn't kept up with research" and the "researcher who can't communicate with students."

Faculty members shouldn't fall into either of these categories. Research and teaching should both be emphasized, with the goal always being to educate students.

The good researcher, President Bateman said, uses his or her knowledge to become a better teacher.

The fourth goal presented at the conference involved upgrading the communications process between administrators and faculty.

Three steps will help in this process, President Bateman said.

They are streamlining decision making, clarifying roles of key personnel, and spending more time discussing individual concerns.

All of these suggestions come directly from the recommendations of the self-study committee and will be implemented as the board reviews the study.

President Bateman re-addresses charges of plagiarism

By JANNA NIELSEN
Universe Staff Writer

Charges of plagiarism have caused President Merrill J. Bateman to think deeply about his role as president at BYU and the mission of the university, he said during his inauguration address at the Aug. 29 morning session of the Annual University Conference.

President Bateman re-addressed charges by an anonymous accuser that he lifted material in his inaugural address from Gertrude Himmelfarb's Sept. 15, 1995 speech at Baylor University.

Once the accusations, President Bateman has told Himmelfarb a letter of apology and thanked her for the manner in which she handled the press topic.

In the letter, he said "that there was no intent to plagiarize" and explained the ambiguity of the citation in his speech.

Monday's conference, President Bateman said of his feelings concerning the matter.

He said that "in no way do I intend to diminish its (BYU's) quality or reputation."

"I do understand to who I am responsible. I understand the divine calling of this university," he said.

President Bateman told those in attendance that, upon hearing about the charges against him, his first concern was for Himmelfarb.

For this reason, he sent the aforementioned letter. His letter explained that he had cited her at the end of a paragraph which contained several paraphrased sentences from her article, "The Christian University: A Call to Counterrevolution."

In this letter, he told Himmelfarb that, "A reference citing your work was included at the end of the last sentence in the paragraph which paraphrased the relevant material cited from 'First Things.'"

Unfortunately, a set of quotations marks was included at that same point to highlight the slogan 'everything is political' and the placement of the citation appears to refer only to the slogan when it refers to the preceding paraphrased sentences in that paragraph."

President Bateman reiterated this information to faculty and staff at Monday's meeting and emphasized the concern he felt for Himmelfarb being put in the middle of the accusations.

He told faculty members that his next concern regarding the charges was for the university and its reputation.

He said that BYU has a divine mission and all members of the university community must work toward the goals set forth in that mission.

"The standard of truthfulness at this university is at the highest level," he said. "We must take care in referencing the work of others."

He said that his belief has always been to express ideas accurately and use the authority of others to buttress one's own information. "I was shocked at the (plagiarism) charge," he said. But he also admitted that there was some ambiguity in his citations.

He used this to remind faculty members that intellectual property is as sacred as physical possessions.

President Bateman's other concern was for "those who feel the need to hide behind anonymity." This is an open university, he said. "My door is always open."

BYU Alumni, campus and faculty focus of Brigham Young Magazine

By SHEA CUTLER
Special Sections Editor

After forking out all your summer's pay for tuition and books, you may be wondering if anything at this university is free. But make it all the way to graduation and you'll be handed not only your diploma (which you paid for) but also your first free subscription of Brigham Young Magazine.

"We try to have something in every issue to interest everyone," said Jim Bell, who has been the editor for 13 1/2 years. "Seventy to 80 percent of those who receive it read most of it."

BYU has had an alumni magazine since the early 1900s. In 1984 the magazine, then called BYU Today, was changed from tabloid to magazine form. Then in 1993 the name was changed to Brigham Young Magazine. It is published quarterly and distributed to alumni and friends.

The alumni magazine has a circulation of 150 thousand to 155 thousand, one of the top five in circulation in the nation, Bell said. It has also received numerous national awards for stories and graphics.

The focus of the magazine is different from any other church publication, dealing directly with happenings on the BYU campus. Different sections are dedicated to alumni, campus, faculty spotlight and even faculty books.

Though controversy is not one of the goals of the magazine, it has had its fair share.

"Whenever we do hot political topics we get a lot of responses," said associate editor Jeff McClellan, recalling an article about the Constitution that ran in the May 1995 issue.

He also said a few of his articles on family and marriage have initiated responses.

"Creating controversy is not our aim, but we do like to make people think," Bell said. "We are here to help the university and to promote its goals."

About half of the magazine's articles are contributed by faculty members or administrators, and often the accolades go directly to them.

"My experience tells me that if the readers really like an article, they'll respond to the faculty member, but if they don't like it, I'll hear from them," Bell chuckled.

Because almost one-third of the magazine's readership is in Utah, the magazine also faces the dilemma of what to cover. Another challenge is the very fact that the magazine is free.

"One of our greatest challenges is to get people to open a magazine that they didn't ask for and read it," Bell explained.

"We never want to become a quick, easy read, though. We'll always do longer more thoughtful articles, but we want a good mix," he continued.

Bell's articles have allowed not only the readers, but himself, a close-up picture of the university and those who run it. Bell mentioned his opportunity to meet with President and Sister Holland, President and Sister Lee, and President and Sister Bateman.

"I never take these experiences for granted. This is the third administration I've worked under and each is very committed to the same goals, the same objective. The forward motion that there is at this place is incredible," Bell said.

The variety at the university supplies an endless pool of stories, Bell explained.

He mentioned stories written about Paul Cox, and ethno-botanist, Jim Mason, who works at the Museum of Art and was instrumental in bringing the China exhibit to BYU, the chance to interview two visiting Supreme Court justices, and the opportunity to see BYU beat Michigan in the 1984 Holiday Bowl.

"It is rewarding when someone calls and wants an article we ran five, six, 10, 12 years ago," Bell said.

"Obviously the university wants to have a lasting effect on people and we want that with the magazine."

"I don't suppose we'll change the world, but I hope we give people something to think about, to learn from, and help them in their growth and progression."

"When I came to the magazine, my idea was that it would be a part of the continuing education effort of the university, and I think it is. I hope it is."

Students perfect language skills in ELC 'Study Buddies' program

Universe Services

"Study Buddies," the English Language Center's pilot program which matches up foreign students learning English with native English speakers who are learning those foreign languages, will be accepting applications beginning Friday, Sept. 6.

Last Winter Semester about 90 students participated in a trial of the program, which aims at giving both native and non-native English speakers the opportunity to gain experience with another language and culture, said Jeri Wyn Gillie, full-time ELC instructor and coordinator of the program.

Interested students may obtain an application either in their foreign language department office, or in room 100 of the Amanda Knight Hall, located at 800 N. University Ave.

The Study Buddy program is completely voluntary. Students are asked to commit to one hour a week throughout the semester to speak with their Study Buddy partner.

Since there is a greater demand for non-native English speakers, native speakers will be selected by their applications on a first-come first-serve basis, Gillie said. No applications will be accepted before Friday to give incoming students the chance to be informed about the Study Buddy program.

Those selected will be notified by their foreign language teacher by Sept. 10. An orientation meeting for participants will give partners a chance to get to know each other and work out study and discussion times. The meeting will be Sept. 12 from 6:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. in room 394 of the Wilkinson Center.

Gillie said the positive feedback they received from the program in the winter made them decide to formalize the program.

Most of the students who participated, she said, "felt they had a friend, and spent more time than just the one hour a week. It helped them a lot with getting over culture shock."

"In the past, the largest number of participants have been Japanese and Spanish speakers," Gillie said. "But Korean is getting larger."

Women finding balance between career, family and schooling

By SHEA CUTLER
Universe Staff Writer

Natalie Young, 23, is not the typical mother. And she is not a typical student either — Young is

There has been a lot of research on working mothers who work the 8-hour shift at a career job, then come home to a grueling "2nd Shift" of housework and childcare. But add to that a third shift — being a student, complete with the never-ending nature of homework. "Sometimes I just get so overwhelmed!" Young said. "Being a student means something is always there. It totally dominates."

Young's baby sleeps through the night and she gets up around 8 a.m. On a typical day, though, sometimes it's earlier. She gets ready, dresses and feeds Alexis, who is 9 1/2 months old, then joins the traffic on Main Street in Orem on her way to day-care. She drops off Alexis and then goes to class at BYU, where she is studying in family science. She picks up Alexis on her way home.

The afternoon is spent putting away things that Alexis has grabbed, trying to get homework done during the baby naps or plays. When her husband returns from his job as a painter, Young either goes to night class, or calls or visits him as part of her job for Utah Family Human Services.

When Alexis is asleep, Young settles in for a long night of homework, staying up until midnight or one in the morning. And still there is not enough time. "I don't have the time to spend with Alexis that I would like. I just try to take advantage of every minute," Young explains.

Young swayed felt a lot of guilt about not being able to be the kind of mother she wanted to be. Other mothers have more time and do more — at least the part she sees. I know that she would like to come first, but it gets hard when things are due."

Dr. Elie Hochschild, author of "The Second Shift," calls dual-earner couples the "starved family." The constant rush of the working world leaves little time or energy to accomplish the necessary tasks at home. So Young is about those who are doing even more — who are adding student to the list of job titles?

Young says students are in a unique situation in their lives and are probably going to tolerate a lot more than other people are when they start to get older," said Alan Hawkins, who teaches a work and family relations class at BYU. "For a few years when you are young and life is exciting, you can do that. I'll bet it gets old real fast."

"But this is just a sprint — if it was a marathon, they would die," Hawkins said.

For Young, the sprint will continue for at least two more years, until she gets her master's in social work. But Young is grateful to be in school.

"If I was a full-time mom, I would go berserk. I was in the store the other day and I saw a lady yelling at her kid and he started screaming, and my first thought was, 'Full-time mom.' I'd rather be happy," Young said. "I'm glad to have other things so that I appreciate the time I spend with Alexis. It makes me a better mom."

Nearly two-thirds of the women in the United States with children under the age of six are employed, according to the U.S. Department of Labor. The number increases with the age of the children so that, in total, 24 million women in America are working outside the home.

But many women are also opting to reduce the time spent in other occupations. "A large number of women are opting out of the corporate work place and starting their own businesses. Others are cutting back their hours, telecommuting — women account for 60 percent of telecommuters — or going back to school. Many are simply going home to be with their children," reported the Atlanta Journal-

Constitution in the July 28, 1996 issue.

Those who are young and have yet to finish college often are not able to cut back on the working hours required to help pay for their schooling. Day care also represents an additional cost on top of text books and tuition.

Young said she had difficulty finding affordable day care that she felt

Library expansion to be completed in 1998

By AMY CRAGUN
Universe Staff Writer

Thousands of books stored in archives and even old grocery stores are being built a new home beginning in September. One of the busiest areas of campus, the quad between the Abraham O. Smoot Administration Building and the Harold B. Lee Library will be inaccessible for at least two years to accommodate the project.

Crews from Jacobsen Construction Co., Inc. of Salt Lake City will tear up the ASB quad starting Sept. 23 to begin construction on a 234,000-square-foot addition to the HBLL. Randy Olsen, deputy university librarian, said the addition should be completed by December 1998, but remodeling of the old facility won't be completed until December 1999.

The addition will be more than half the size of the existing facility and will be completely underground.

Two full floors and a partial third floor for mechanical rooms will be constructed with a glass-enclosed entryway on the north side of the existing library and walkways for access from within the old building. The existing building will be remodeled to upgrade mechanical and electrical systems.

Olsen said the addition will move the university into the next century. All tables and carrels will be wired to connect laptops to the Internet.

"We think by the turn of the century you will be coming to campus with a laptop," he said.

Changes to the old building include a music library to be housed on the fourth floor. The learning resource center will also move to the fourth floor and the genealogical library to the first floor.

To reroute disrupted sewer lines from the ASB, Jesse Knight Humanities Building and HBLL to the N. Eldon Tanner Building, the parking lot north of the JKHB will become a 60-foot hole in the ground. The area will be enclosed through Fall and Winter Semesters and will be resurfaced in April or May.

The ASB quad will be inaccessible as will the area between the Harris Fine Arts Center and Ernest L. Wilkinson Center. Students will have to find ways around the fenced-in site to reach buildings surrounding the quad. Mike Stratton, director of construction at BYU, said fences will be up before classes start.

He said the north entrance to the library will be accessible now but will close when the construction schedule necessitates it.

"We will keep it open as long as possible," he said.

The project will remove 380 parking spaces from use to accommodate construction staging and utility work.

Wilkinson Center construction forces different navigation routes

By JEANETTE BENNETT
Universe Staff Writer

Learning to navigate around a new campus is often a top concern for freshmen. However, first-year students won't be the only ones wondering how to get to their next class during Fall Semester.

Construction on several buildings, including the Wilkinson Center, have forced students and visitors alike to change their routes.

The Wilkinson Center, home of the BYU Bookstore, Cougarat and other student services, has been under construction since Nov. 15, 1995, and the projected completion date is March 12, 1998.

"Trying to keep so many people and so many organizations operating in the Wilkinson Center during all of the renovating and construction has been a daily process," said Warren Jones, special projects manager and assistant director of planning.

Entering, exiting and navigating through the building may require additional time.

Accessible entrances into the ELWC are:

- * First floor, east side, under the canopy.
- * Northwest entrance to the Bookstore from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Monday through Friday and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday.

* Southwest entrance to the Bookstore at the Twilight Zone during the hours listed above.

* Second floor, east side on the patio.

* Second floor, south side by the cafeteria.

* Second floor, north entrance (near the Candy Jar).

The northeast entrance from the Cougarat to the Bookstore is closed. To get to the Bookstore from the ELWC you will need to exit the building on the south through the hallway by room 250 across from the old step-down lounge and enter the Bookstore from the southwest (Twilight Zone) entrance. You can also enter the store through the outside northwest entrance.

Cougarat II is located in the ballroom and east court.

The Candy Jar is operating in a temporary location by the hallway by room 250 on the second floor while renovation work is being done in their permanent location. The Varsity Theatre is still showing movies.

The size of the existing Wilkinson Center is 284,000 square feet. The addition will add 90,000 square feet to the facility.

"One of the driving forces of the construction is to replace outdated electrical and mechanical facilities,"

Jones said. "The renovations are related to problems with infrastructure."

In addition, the building will be braced seismically, Jones said.

Student-related services now found in the Spencer W. Kimball Tower and Career Placement Services in the Abraham O. Smoot Administration Building will move to the ELWC. A food court will be added that will make more fast-food outlets available for students.

Beginning in Winter Semester, the Bookstore will undergo remodeling.

"After the rush of students getting their books is over (in January), the first phase will begin," Jones said. The first phase will be renovating the third floor, which houses the textbooks.

Retained earnings from the Wilkinson Center and its services are funding the construction project, Jones said.

For more information, you can call 378-ELWC or visit their web site at <http://stlife.byu.edu/construction/>.

Student Life provides information weekly. Their "Renovation Update" fliers are found in stands around the ELWC.

A time-line for the work is in the east lounge. A question/answer board is posted east of the elevators on the second floor. Suggestion boxes are also mounted near the elevators.

was also safe. Though she only leaves her baby for four hours, she wanted to find a place that was open, and had good security measures, such as requiring parents dropping off their children to sign in and write down who would be picking up the child.

"One of my biggest worries was that someone else would come and take [Alexis]," Young said. She also said Alexis has become more comfortable as she has gotten to know the staff members, and as they have learned who Alexis belongs to.

Such troubles are not the concern of most students, but to those few who do wear all three job titles, these pressures can be distracting and at times overwhelming. Young said she used to worry constantly about whether Alexis was safe, happy, eating right and growing and developing properly. As the baby has grown, however, such pressures have decreased. After all, she is still alive, so something must be right, chuckled Young.

Young is fortunate to have a husband who is eager and willing to share the responsibility of parenting. He takes care of the baby when he gets home so Young is free to do homework or work with clients. Many women are not in such an egalitarian relationship. In fact, Hochschild found that the average woman works an entire month of 24-hour days more than the average man.

And still not everything can get finished. Often a form of "selective neglect" takes place — something has to give. Hawkins said he believes that in such situations, often it is the marriage itself that is untended.

"Marriage seems to be the one place where we have a sense that somehow fudge, that the sa we're making now we'll be make up for later," he explained. "I'll bet that if that went on for longer, it would be tough to good, strong relationship."

Young said that finding time for other has never really been a for her and her husband. "I make time for each other, especially on Saturdays," Young explained.

The real cost behind film making

JOANNA KASPER
Universe Staff Writer

Have you ever seen an independent film? Wondered who's home video you're watching? Well, you might be surprised to find out how much work went into making a film.

It's not just the money, time and the devotion it takes to make an independent film, said Jeff Isom, a recent film graduate.

Isom said that making a film is a huge task, and you have to be patient that you get any-thing, Isom said.

Van Wagenen said that in a sense it is not a problem to raise money for films, but that it requires persistence, hard work, flexibility in thinking, time and a good project to validate the use of donated funds.

"There are thousands of ways to find money, you just have to consider every possible option from credit cards, relative and corporate underwriting to private investment," he said.

To further reduce the overall cost of making a film, many independents search for volunteers to fill as many crew positions as possible. In order to get volunteers, Pate said that he makes friends with people he works with on films, forming connections.

Once the independent film is completed, the work is often showcased at a film festival for independent artists.

"The Sundance Film Festival is probably the most important festival in the United States. It is more than a way to get into Hollywood, it is a celebration of all kinds of films," said Ken Maxwell, director of the Utah Film and Video Festival.

Last year Sundance attracted 10,000 guests, bringing in major film and television executives, making Sundance the largest festival in Utah, said R.J. Millard, from the Sundance Press Office.

"For festival award winners, it acts as a major marketing tool in the distribution of the artist's work and provides a $5,000 cash award," Millard said.

Olpin, who had his work showcased at Sundance in 1993 said the festival was very beneficial to his film making career.

"It's a buzz word to be able to say that I was shown at Sundance," he said.

While film festivals provide exposure for the work of independents, as well as access to the industry, the independent film maker is not limited to festivals to get their work showcased.

"There are other ways to get your work recognized, such as talking to distributors of independent films," Van Wagenen said. "Typically however, it takes a long time and you have to be very, very persistent. It's sort of like taking on a political campaign."

Forest Baker, founder of the company Feature Films for Families, said another option for the film maker is to route around Hollywood all together.

"I finally got so tired of coming out of a movie and thinking that the movie would have been better if only one scene containing offensive material had been left out that I indirectly decided to become an independent film maker," Baker said.

Because Hollywood refused to let Baker edit films which they had the rights to, he eventually created a business which sells films produced and marketed by his company.

Isom said that overall there is a lot of work that goes into making films and a person needs to have the desire and experience of working with film to make a good film.

"If you are going to succeed, you have to be willing to cooperate and to do the jobs no one else wants to do, but a lot of people aren't willing to do that," Wilcox said.

Norwegian opera vocalist to perform in HFAC

Universe Services

In the mood for some opera? BYU is welcoming Norwegian vocalist Marit Osnes Aambo, a mezzo-soprano from Oslo, Norway, Wednesday to the Madsen Recital Hall at 7:30 p.m.

Aambo made her first public appearance in 1977 and has been in much demand as a soloist.

She has since performed at the Bergen International Music Festival and been a guest artist at the Norwegian National Opera.

Her 1989 debut in London won her great critical acclaim.

Aambo has performed with the Norwegian Symphony Orchestra as well as on television and radio.

She has worked with composer Antonio Bibalo who has written several pieces for her voice.

Aambo majored in music and drama at the Bergen Teachers College.

She graduated from the National College of Operatic Arts in Oslo and then went on to study in London, Rome and Zurich.

Aambo plans to include vocal works by Edvard Grieg, Frederick Delius, and Percy Grainger at her Wednesday performance. She will also sing Xavier Montsalvatge's "Cinco Canciones Negras."

She will be accompanied by Jim Reilly.

Admission is free.

IT DON'T MEAN A THING IF IT AIN'T GOT THAT SWING: Jason Neubert, a freshman from Illinois, majoring in engineering, dances with Jennifer Gale, a sophomore majoring in humanities from Orange County, Calif. Swing Kids Club is a popular new club on campus that has dancing every Saturday night in the Richards Building.

Swing Kids Club dances the night away

By SAMANTHA RIGO
Universe Staff Writer

On Saturday nights the beats of big band music might be felt bopping down the second floor of the Richards Building. Follow the music to its source and you will enter a room filled with vigorous dancers swinging to the sounds of jazz greats like Benny Goodman, Duke Ellington, and Count Basie.

Swing Kids became a club last Fall semester when a handful of students aspired to share their love of swing dancing — a love which has become contagious.

Last Fall semester, two separate groups began meeting weekly to dance to swing music. Jenn Gale, Fall semester president of Swing Kids, was in one of those groups. At first, participation began with five people which soon doubled to 10 people and then 20. The numbers have been increasing exponentially with a participation of about 300 people on Saturday nights.

"I love the camaraderie and friendship," said Gale, a sophomore from Tustin, Calif., majoring in humanities. "It's a great alternative to typical weekend activities."

Many of the club's organizers and participants became interested in the club after watching a movie which became the club's namesake — "Swing Kids."

The movie, set in 1939 Hamburg, Germany, deals with a group of German teen-agers who were persecuted because of their devotion to American jazz and rambunctious swing dancing.

Those who do not know any swing steps need not fear. Often, people who go not knowing how to dance to the music leave knowing many new steps. There is also a lot of improvisation with the steps.

"Swing is totally freestyle," said Kacy Humberstone, vice-president of the club last year. "At first, it looks difficult but people learn quickly."

Swing Kids meets on Saturdays from 8 to 11 p.m. at 270 RB.

For more information about Swing Kids and club membership call Jenn Gale at 377-8967.

ARTISTIC BURIAL: "Picnic at the Footstool," an installation by Shawn R. Skabelund of Ann Arbor, Mich., is on display on the 2nd floor of the Springville Art Museum through Oct. 6. This piece is a statement against the overdevelopment along the Wasatch front. The construction of houses has invaded the deer habitat.

soil is a grave.
Skabelund explained the symbolism of the piece: The circle represents the Earth and the four paths represent the four cardinal directions.
"That circle comes from the swastika-image, which most ancient cultures use because it represents the four cardinal directions. ... I was influenced by the Native Americans, who also use the swastika symbol," he said.
"The aspen tree represents the spirit of the deer rising. It's rising through the picnic table — through this mess.
In all my pieces I try to give some hope, and the aspen in this piece is hope. ... The spirit of this deer will rise above and we'll see our human pollutions," Skabelund said.

"The strength I saw in his work is he balanced the geometrical with the organic and also balanced the purely formal with the message," Swanson
said.
Skabelund said that a lot of people see the installation and think it's an anti-hunting message, but this is not the case.
Hunting is necessary because we've wiped out the deer's predators. So we've become the deer's predators and must create the balance, he said.
Skabelund has a statement that accompanies the piece so people won't misinterpret the real message of anti-overdevelopment.
"It is open to interpretation, but the artist has been kind enough to give an indication in a statement. ... It's not spelled out completely that personal interpretation couldn't add to the experience," Swanson said.

Skabelund explained that his art is large-scale and site-specific, meaning each piece is planned for the area in which it will be displayed.

"(My work) is created specifically for the site its intended to be shown at, designed with the social, environmental and political concerns for that area," he said.

Skabelund lives in Ann Arbor, Mich., with his wife and child; however, he spent his teen-age years in Springville where his parents still live.

Therefore, he was very aware of the environmental concerns of overdevelopment in Utah County.

"I knew what was going on here, with developers slowly climbing the mountain with their housing and encroaching on the deer habitat," Skabelund said.

"They continue to develop and build these humongous houses, and this is the home where the deer live.
We have to be better stewards for them. Since they can't vote and write letters to their congressmen, people like me are trying to defend them," he said.

People that came to the opening reception of the installation on Aug.
28, continually asked Skabelund,
"What should we do?" and "Where should we draw the line on development?"

Skabelund answered, "I don't know, but I can show you what we've done and where we should've stopped."

"I can look at a mountain and say I'm disgusted with what's going on,"
he said.

"In the last 15 years, all this stuff has been developed, and in the winter time, where can the deer go to feed? Where's their habitat?"
Skabelund asked.

Utah County is not the only place where Skabelund voices his environmental concerns.

He has also had shows at the Urban Institute for Contemporary Art in Grand Rapids, Mich.; the Paint Creek Center for the Arts in Rochester, Mich.; Cornell College in Mt. Vernon, Iowa; and Whitworth
College in Spokane, Wash.

Moving in, a yearly ritual

By J. AUDREY THATCHER
Universe Staff Writer

At the beginning of every school year, I become a bit tense and rather analytical. I think it has something to do with getting a new apartment with all new roommates.

I have just finished moving into my third Heritage
Halls apartment.
The most frequently asked question I
and my fellow hall-
mates get is a disbelieving "You still live on campus?"

(My most common excuse is that I don't need a car
if my classes are three minutes from my front door, and it's cheaper since I'm still paying the 1993 rental rates.
But I can come up with more excuses;
I'm good at that.)

I should now be an expert at moving in. I have to laugh at how some things are the same every year.

This year I moved in several days early, expecting the apartment to be deserted. But when I arrived, someone else had already moved in. I noted the initials marked on various items in the kitchen and knew they didn't match the names of the roommates Heritage Halls had told me I was going to be with.

So I got in my detective mood and tried to figure out what she was like by the types of things she had in the apartment. Everything she had was familiar — the same brands of things
I always had — and I even approved of her taste in food (I didn't see any broccoli).

When she finally came home, I was in my room, finishing unpacking. I had to decide whether to go out and say hello right away. It was just that initial first-sight, first-impression thing I never liked. Should I go out now? In a half-hour? What if she didn't have a good day at work? What if she liked country music?

Finally, though, I gathered up the courage to meet her. There had been a change at the last minute and she was able to stay in the apartment for the school year. I realized I was glad, and I went to bed peacefully.

And so it went every day. First I would see somebody's stuff scattered in the hallway, or maybe hear a voice.
Then, I would take a breath and try to
ing the newest roommate for the first time.

With each new arrival, we had to adjust to make space in the kitchen and the bathroom. It's always interesting to arrive and find, for example, that between six people, there are four handmixers yet not one frying pan.

The bathroom is the same way. We now have four curling irons mingling with each other on the sink, plus about five bottles of various contact
lens solution sitting in the medicine cabinets.

So everything's settling into the normal Heritage life. I think it'll be a good year. For the first time, I think I have an apartment that can work it out so that we don't have six separate jars of mayonnaise filling up the refrigerator, or seven gallons of milk waiting to expire all at once.

It should be a fun year now that we can all relax again. But I sure hope none of my roommates are reading this.

Cougars run over Arkansas St. 58-9

By STEVE MOHLMAN
Assistant Sports Editor

By defeating the Arkansas State University Indians Saturday night at Cougar Stadium, the Cougars scored more points than any BYU football team since 1990's Ty Detmer-led team that scored 62 points against San Diego State.

The final score of 58-9 did not reflect how the Cougars played at times. Coach LaVell Edwards warned his players against an emotional lapse, but no amount of preparation could convince the Cougars that they weren't a much better team than the visiting Indians.

"We came out and executed quite well, but we were not quite as sharp as last week. We were focused all week, however. There was no appreciable let-down," Edwards said.

No "appreciable" let-down. But is it possible to be as fired up to play a 31-point underdog as it is to play a nationally-ranked team like Texas A&M? BYU quarterback Steve Sarkisian doesn't think so.

"I don't think mentally we were quite as sharp as we were last week, and I don't think we expected to be. We're not going to be as fired up as we were last weekend. We just played to the emotion of the game, and the game just kind of lacked emotion," Sarkisian said.

Lack of concentration and mental readiness was evident at times as well. The Cougars were penalized nine times, and BYU's biggest play of the game was nullified when James Dye's 77-yard punt return for a touchdown was taken back after a clipping call.

"We had too many penalties. We're not quite as sharp as we should've been," Edwards said.

These minor lapses aside, however, the Cougars scored on 10 of 14 possessions, and racked up 560 yards of total offense. 258 of those yards came

Shannon Henry/Daily Universe

GOLDEN ARM: With plenty of protection from his offensive line, BYU quarterback Steve Sarkisian releases one of his 23 passes against Arkansas St. Saturday night. Sarkisian completed 16 passes for 259 yards and threw four touchdown passes. The big story, however, was the BYU running attack, which took advantage of the Indians' zone defense for 258 yards on the ground.

on the ground, a major improvement over last week's 39 rushing yards.

Junior running back Dustin Johnson led the team in rushing with 88 yards on only nine carries. BYU planned to establish its ground game, and did so Saturday, running the ball 60 times and dominating the time clock.

Due to BYU's prolific rushing attack, the Cougars didn't throw the ball nearly as often as they usually do. Sarkisian still completed 16 of 23 passes for 259 yards with four touchdowns and two interceptions. The biggest play of the day was Sarkisian's 69-yard completion to K.O. Kealaluhi in the third quarter to put the game out of reach at 31-3.

The defensive unit for BYU was well-rested thanks to the time-consuming offense. The Indians were forced to punt eight times, threw two interceptions, lost a fumble and turned the ball over on downs once.

The defense was led by linebackers Brad Martin and Shay Muirbrook. Martin had six unassisted tackles, two tackles for a loss and a fumble recovery. Butkus Award candidate Muirbrook had seven tackles, a pass deflection and an interception.

Another positive for the Cougars was the performance of senior kicker Ethan Pochman. Pochman, who struggled against Texas A&M, was perfect for the day. He hit all three field goal attempts, all six extra point attempts, and sent his kickoffs booming deep into the Arkansas State end zone.

"I didn't see any weaknesses in them," ASU head coach John Bobo said. "They misfired sometimes in the beginning or it could have been uglier than it was."

BYU will next play the University of Washington in Seattle on Sept. 14 on ABC-TV.

Cougars establish run in nighttime scrimmage

By PETER CHRISTENSEN
Sports Editor

Coming into Saturday night's scrimmage with lowly Arkansas State, the Cougars had three objectives: shore up the kicking game, establish the running game and establish the kicking game. Of the 90 plays BYU ran against Arkansas State, 60 were on the ground.

football.

"I made a few mistakes (against Texas A&M) but I learned from them and I wasn't going to let that happen again," he said.

But it was the running game that BYU coaches appeared most intent on establishing. Of the 90 plays BYU ran against Arkansas State, 60 were on the ground.

Marsh wins PGA tournament in Park City

Associated Press

PARK CITY — It looks like Graham Marsh made the right decision in the late 1970s when he decided to continue his global golf pursuits. Almost 20 years after the Australian won his only PGA Tour title, he says there's nothing like that experience.

"For better or worse, I chose to play in Japan, Europe and Australia after I won in 1977. Obviously, I have some regrets about that now, but it was a family-orientated decision," Marsh said Sunday after winning the $800,000 Franklin Quest Championship.

"I would have enjoyed playing more in the U.S. That's why I find the Senior PGA Tour so exciting."

In only his third year on the senior tour, Marsh won his third title with a final-round 67 and a three-day total of 14-under 202 on the par-72 Park Meadows Golf Club for a two-shot win over Texan Kermit Zarley.

Marsh is in the middle of one of golf's great hot streaks, going 72-under-par over a span of 12 tournaments. The streak almost ended in the first nine holes Sunday, but a little tinkering with a golf club Saturday night paid off.

"I had been hitting a sand wedge with 54 degrees loft on the first two rounds and couldn't get any spin with it," said Marsh.

"So my caddy, Mark Amundson, and I went over to a nearby club (The Homestead) and added another 2 1/2 degrees loft to it. In the first nine holes Sunday, I used it five times and got up and down every time."

Marsh started the day one stroke off the lead, but birdied three of the first nine holes to set up his back-nine charge that clipped Zarley. The win was worth $120,000, while Zarley took home $70,400.

"That extra loft on my wedge really did the trick on the front nine, which was a case of mere survival," said

Marsh. "The win ... made some of approaches to these greens very difficult."

Zarley finished with a 68 and a 54-hole total of 204. Jack Kiefer birdied the 17th and 18th holes for a 70 and finished third at 11-under.

Marsh says his international experience aided him down the stretch.

"The critical thing on U.S. courses, particularly here, is that Park Meadows suits my game. You couldn't throw the ball at half these pin placements. It required a knockdown shot," he said.

"Playing in windy conditions around the world helped me. Certainly, having won around the world provides confidence."

Marsh has now won 59 titles on five golf tours around the world; 24 in Japan, one on the PGA Tour, 15 on the European Tour, 16 in Australia and three senior tournaments.

With his win, Marsh upped his season winnings to $848,537 with 10 events left on the senior schedule.

Zarley's fate was decided on the 17th hole, too.

"I hit a 5-wood for my second shot there and it wasn't enough," he said. "I probably should have used a 3-wood."

Zarley's shot ended up in the front bunker, leaving him an explosion shot of 100 feet. But he didn't get it close and settled for par.

ALL IT! Two BYU volleyball players get ready for a kill against USC in 1994. The 1996 squad played well this weekend, taking defending national champions Nebraska to five sets.

No. 19 BYU women split pair in volleyball tourney

By CRAIG CRAZE
Universe Sports Writer

The 19th-ranked BYU women's volleyball team started the 1996 season with a split, narrowly losing 2-3 to defending national champion Nebraska and then thumping Kansas State 3-0 last weekend at Domino's Pizza/University of New Mexico Classic in Albuquerque, N.M.

"We were a little bit better than I thought we would be," said BYU coach Elaine Michaelis, referring to the Cougars' performance against Nebraska. BYU lost the match 10-15, 12-15, 15-11, 15-12.

"Had we had Gale (Johnson) I think we would have won. They only had one more point than we did in the entire match," Michaelis said. "Having a senior and a team captain on the floor can make that difference."

Leading the Cougars in kills were sophomore Helen Hjorth and junior American Amy Steele, each going away 18. Hjorth hit .273 while Steele hit .234 against the Huskers. Senior Heather Whittaker had one kill and nine assists to lead the Cougars in blocking while Steele and sophomore Andrea Petrilli led in digs with 24 each.

"We held their top hitter, who was an All-American last year, to .202 in she is normally hitting in the .300s," Michaelis said.

Petrilli recorded 40 sets and freshman Anna-Lena Smith had 24 as the Cougars ran their 6-2 offense. The setting was young and three positions in the 6-2 were new, but they were able to carry out a game plan," Michaelis said.

In the second night of action, BYU sophomore Korie Rogers scored a team-high 12 kills in 18 attempts for a career-best .667 hitting percentage to lead the Cougars over the Indians of Arkansas State, 15-8, 15-8, 15-1.

Not far behind Rogers was Hjorth with seven kills in 16 attempts. Hjorth also shared the top honors in digs, tying freshman Caroline Steuer's eight-dig performance.

Getting playing time for the first time in two seasons was senior Lori Mertes, who returned this spring from an LDS mission.

"It has done wonders for her maturity," said Michaelis, referring to Mertes' mission. "She is very supportive of everyone, and isn't concerned with what's good for her as much as she is concerned with what's good for the team."

Mertes played a couple of the games against Arkansas State, during which the Cougars made the switch to a 5-1 offense.

"Eventually we want to be there," Michaelis said, referring to the 5-1. "But the setting is young and we have to develop that before we go to it."

By the end of the match, BYU had a team hitting average of .333 while it held the Indians to .028.

The 1-1 Cougars now prepare for their first home match of the year when they host 14th-ranked Pacific and Pepperdine in the Mizuno Classic Friday and Saturday at the Smith Fieldhouse.

Aggies shock listless Utes to open season

Associated Press

LOGAN — Billed as an early season duel between running backs, Utah State's Abu Wilson outperformed University of Utah's Chris Fuamatu-Ma'afala as the Aggies upset the Utes 20-17 Saturday night in Romney Stadium.

The Aggies have not beaten Utah at home since 1983, and Wilson's two-touchdown, 148-yard performance on 32 carries keyed the victory. Fuamatu-Ma'afala rushed for 49 yards on 14 carries and Juan Johnson gained 51 yards on 12 carries.

Utah had a chance to tie the game and force an overtime with 1:23 left, but a delay of game penalty forced Ute kicker Daniel Pulsipher to kick from the 44-yard line and the attempt was wide to the right. Pulsipher had earlier hit an 18-yard field goal in the third quarter.

USU used two quarterbacks in the victory. Starter Patrick Mullin went down with an injury with 1:41 left in the first half. Backup QB Matt Sauk threw for 81 yards on 20 attempts, to go with Mullin's 120 yards on 21 throws.

USU's Nakia Jenkins caught 8 passes for 73 yards, including a 19-yard grab on a third down bootleg pass from Sauk. That keyed the Aggies' final scoring drive.

Utah State took the early lead in the game on a Micah Knorr field goal from 27 yards out at 6:05 in the first quarter.

Utah responded in the next series with an 11-yard pass from Mike Fouts to C.J. Johnson. USU again took the lead with Wilson powering in from the 6-yard line near the end of the second quarter.

Utah was unable to move the ball during the next series, but a tipped Aggie pass was pulled down by Ute defensive back Henry Lusk and gave Utah another chance to score. On a third down and 22 yard play, Fouts went to Terence Keehan for a 30-yard TD pass, and a 14-10 score at the half.

Just before halftime, Mullins went down with pulled ankle tendons while blocking on an option run by Wilson and was escorted from the field. He was available for play in the second half, but Aggie head coach John L. Smith chose to go with newcomer Sauk.

going to start playing back on us," BYU halfback Dustin Johnson said. "If we can't establish the run it's going to be a lot harder to pass."

Johnson, who usually does more blocking than running, carried the ball nine times for 88 yards and caught three passes for 55 yards. Teammates have affectionately begun to call him "moose" — after Dallas Cowboys running back Daryl Johnson — because of his hard-nosed work ethic and propensity for running over people.

"I enjoy running over a guy more than I like to juke him," Johnson said.

Steve Sarkisian gave much of the credit for BYU's running success to the offensive line, which dominated the line of scrimmage from the start.

"Our offensive line deserves a credit in the world. They are aggressive, they are very athletic. We can do a lot of things running ball."

"You just have to have a run game if you want to be a good tight end," Chad Lewis said. "Run takes a lot of timing and part of timing was developed to night."

st shows explosion wouldn't bring down plane

Associated Press

THTOWN, N.Y. — Preliminary by Boeing Co. indicates that pllosion of the center fuel tank would not have been powerful gh to bring down TWA Flight an investigator told The iated Press on Monday.

se early findings tend to then the theory that a bomb or e brought down the jumbo jet, o weaken the likelihood that the exploded because of a mechani- alfunction.

le investigators say they do not enough to declare the explosion inal act, the possibility of an ent appears more remote as the ace mounts.

ional Transportation Safety l investigators previously have determined that the center fuel tank exploded. But a critical question has been whether that explosion was the cause of the crash — or was a secondary blast, ignited by another force.

After using computer models to simulate pressure within a 747's center fuel tank, Boeing engineers estimated that 30 to 40 pounds per square inch of pressure inside the tank would be needed to do the kind of damage that has been observed so far in Flight 800, the report found.

Testing indicates that an internal explosion of the tank, caused by a malfunction, would generate a third less pressure than that.

"The preliminary analysis indicates that if the center fuel tank was to explode on its own from an internal source, it would not do the kind of damage we have witnessed in Flight 800," an investigator familiar with the study, speaking on condition of anonymity, told the AP.

"This indicates that there must have been multiple things going on in addition to the fuel tank explosion," the source said.

The outdoor temperature was 71 degrees, about the same as it was on the evening of July 17 when Flight 800 exploded 11 1/2 minutes after takeoff, killing all 230 people aboard. Nineteen victims remain missing.

The approximate temperature in the test-flight fuel tank was measured at 115 degrees, sufficient to be ignited by an electrical spark. But there is no clue about what would have provided such a spark. The NTSB so far has not uncovered any plausible answers in the fuel or electrical systems.

Church to build Montana temple

Universe Services

The southeastern Montana community of Billings has been named as the site of a new temple for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

It will be the 30th LDS temple in the United States and the 64th in the world.

The First Presidency announced Friday that land has been acquired, and construction will begin after architectural drawings are completed and local governmental approvals are received.

Nearly 60,000 Latter-day Saints in Montana, South Dakota and northern Wyoming will be served by the temple.

The church members in what will be the Billings Montana Temple District are currently served by temples in Idaho Falls, Chicago, Denver and Cardston, Alberta.

The LDS Church operates 49 temples worldwide, with another 15 in stages of design or construction.

Temples are under construction in St. Louis, Mo.; Preston, England; Bogota, Colombia; Madrid, Spain; Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic; Guayaquil, Ecuador; and Vernal, Utah.

Another activity involving LDS temples is the ongoing open house at the Mount Timpanogos Temple in American Fork.

TICKER TAPE PARADE: Bob Dole and his wife Elizabeth wave from the podium on the floor of the Republican National Convention in San Diego, Thursday, Aug. 15, 1996. Dole will address American Legion conventioners and guests in Utah this morning.

Dole is expected on Tuesday to needle President Clinton for passing on a similar invitation to speak before the nation's largest veterans' organization.

The American Legion commander last week said Clinton's excuse of scheduling problems "rings hollow." Clinton is the first sitting president since Gerald Ford to decline an invitation to speak at the Legion convention during an election year, the organization says.

Reform Party candidate Ross Perot is to address the veterans group Wednesday.

Dole, a veteran himself, is expected to get a rousing welcome in his late morning address to the convention. He was seriously wounded in Italy in 1945, where he served as a second lieutenant.

Gladys Briggs, carrying a sign at the airport rally and calling Clinton a draft-dodger and Dole a patriot, said she understood why Clinton didn't want to address legionnaires.

"I've heard several veterans say Clinton knew better than to come here," she said. "He can lie all he wants, but he still dodged the draft."

Dole has been sharply critical of Clinton administration defense policies, saying that Clinton went too far trimming the defense budget. Clinton had pledged defense cuts of $60 billion but actually cut defense programs by $127 billion.

The Republican challenger also has taken pains to contrast his service with Clinton's steps to avoid the Vietnam War draft.

The visit is Dole's second to Utah this year. He was in Salt Lake last January to receive the endorsement of Republican Gov. Mike Leavitt, meet with LDS Church leaders and attend a fund-raiser.

Yet Dole's poll numbers have been lackluster for a state that hasn't voted for a Democrat for president since Lyndon Johnson in 1964.

A Dan Jones & Associates poll, commissioned by the Deseret News and KSL-TV in July, showed 53 percent of those asked had a favorable opinion of the former Kansas senator, 36 percent had an unfavorable opinion and 10 percent held no opinion.

Clinton's approval rating was at 49 percent, while 45 percent said they had a negative opinion.

And a Valley Research poll published in August by The Salt Lake Tribune said the race was a virtual dead-heat. Some 36 percent of voters at the time said they favored Clinton and 31 percent favored Dole. The poll had a 4.5-point margin of error.

Iraqi troops withdraw; Clinton still wary of Hussein's motives

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — As President Clinton weighed retaliation, his chief spokesman said today that an Iraqi withdrawal from the northern city of Irbil "is not terribly significant," because Saddam Hussein's troops still encircle the city.

"We see no indication that they are preparing withdrawal back to their original forward positions," presidential Press Secretary Mike McCurry said in a briefing from Air Force One.

McCurry said national security adviser Anthony Lake flew to Little Rock, Ark., Sunday night to brief the president.

"Our interest is in making sure that Saddam does not believe that unjustified behavior of this type is cost-free," McCurry said as Clinton flew to Wisconsin for a Labor Day rally.

McCurry said the report of a withdrawal "is terribly significant because they still have a significant force arrayed around Irbil."

But Republicans, led by presidential nominee Bob Dole, accused the administration of dropping the ball by not taking action before Saddam's troops moved into a Kurdish safe-haven zone Friday.

White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta, interviewed Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press," would not elaborate on diplomatic or military moves against Iraq. But he said Saddam had been warned "that if he took that kind of action it would have consequences and it will have consequences."

Iraqi troops began withdrawing from the Kurdish city of Irbil Sunday afternoon and were still pulling back early Monday, said Gisper Nielsen of the U.N. Guard Contingency stationed in Irbil. Another U.N. official said troops had left the city but some tanks remained just outside the city limits.

White House Press Secretary Mike McCurry said Hussein must not go unchallenged. "Because he is prone to miscalculation, that might lead him to believe he can do other things that are clearly unacceptable," McCurry said.

On the military front, the Pentagon said Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, left Saturday night for the Middle East to confer with U.S. commanders and American allies.

Officials said Clinton had called British Prime Minister John Major and would call French President Jacques Chirac. Britain and France are America's two main partners in enforcing a no-fly, safe-haven zone in northern Iraq set up after Iraqi troops crushed a Kurdish rebellion there in 1991, sending some 2 million Kurds into exile in Turkey and Iran.

Bill may affect newsroom privacy

By KRISTI SMITH
Universe Staff Writer

Journalists are split about what the effects of a new Senate bill aimed at stopping child pornography might have on investigative journalism.

Senate bill 1237, known as the "Child Pornography Prevention Act of 1995," aims not only to expand the definition of child pornography to include computer-manipulated images, but also to prevent civil lawsuits against government officials who violate the Privacy Protection Act during search and seizure of materials relating to child pornography investigations.

Enacted in 1980, the Privacy Protection Act was created in response to the Supreme Court case Zurcher vs. Stanford Daily, involving a newsroom search by police officers looking for broadcast news tapes depicting student rioters.

The Stanford newsroom had refused to turn over the tapes, claiming that the seizure was in violation of their First Amendment rights and would damage their ability to gather news, explained Joel Campbell of the Deseret News.

The issue, he said, was whether or not the government "could come and take all the information we've gathered as a news gathering organization and use it in a court case ... Our freedom and independence is compromised when government can use our notes to prosecute somebody," Campbell said.

BYU journalism professor John Gholdston explained some of the harmful implications of police seizure of news materials.

"It hurts your sources," Gholdston said. "Newsrooms need to be able to operate on a confidential level sometimes in order to be able to facilitate the information flow. People would be reticent to ever talk," he said, citing the example of "Deep Throat," the key informer in Watergate.

"On the other hand," Gholdston said, "police need to be able to do their own work."

"We're good citizens — we help the police — but we're not the deputy," said Con Psarras of KUTV Channel 2, explaining a journalist's duty objective.

Campbell, however, doesn't think that the bill is necessarily damaging to news reporters' rights. He cited there are still strict criteria police must meet before conducting news searches, including having sufficient cause to suspect a crime, obtain a subpoena, and exhausting all appeals processes.

Museum of Art to shorten hours

By KATELYN HANDY
Universe Staff Writer

For economic reasons, the Museum of Art has reduced the number of hours it will be open for the 1996-97 school year. The museum will be open on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. On Thursdays the Museum will remain open from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. On Saturdays patrons may visit the museum from noon to 5 p.m. Mike Sparr, assistant director of the Museum of Art said that the reduction in hours was an economic consideration. By cutting back on student staff, the museum will then be able to meet next year's budget requirements, he said. "We are laying the groundwork for a long-range future. By doing a bit of belt tightening over the next fiscal year, we will be able to add more programs, exhibitions and staff in the future. This is part of a long-range strategic plan that we have developed for the museum to ensure our financial stability for the future years," Sparr said. Last year, when the Imperial Tombs of China Exhibit was at the MOA, the museum increased the hours from 9 a.m to 9 p.m., Mondays through Saturdays to accommodate the number of visitors to the exhibit.

While no exhibits will be of the magnitude that the Chinese exhibit was, the museum is currently looking at three or four bigger events that may come in the future, Sparr said. The next large exhibit will open in November, which is Independent Spirits: Women painters of the American West. This will be the biggest exhibit during the next school year. Future changes to the museum include construction of an auditorium on the first floor, which is now used for storage. The auditorium will have almost 150 seats and will be used for programs and lectures.

Volunteers clean up area homes

By MICHELLE CHAMBERLAIN
Universe Staff Writer

Cleaning up neighborhoods, painting weathered homes, preventing crimes and assisting in home improvement loans are some of the things Neighborhood Reinvestment Service (NHS) does to revitalize neighborhoods. Debbie Smith, an administrative specialist at the Provo chapter of NHS, said she has been involved in volunteering within the city for several years and is excited to be part of the Neighborhood Reinvestment Service into Provo to assess certain neighborhoods. Smith said when the group assesses neighborhoods, there are certain criteria necessary before NHS is established in the area. Some of the criteria include neighborhood volunteers, assistance from local businesses and the city must donate a certain amount of money. The Provo chapter of NHS is established in March 1995 and has organized cleanup projects, painting projects and helped several families obtain home improvement loans and home purchasing loans within less than a year and a half of operation. "The organization is a partnership between businesses, homeowners, renters, volunteers and the government, to assure those in need are receiving sufficient help. Who knows when any of us will become needy, that's why we volunteer now," Smith said. Margaret Steward said she feels it is the best thing to happen to her neighborhood. She is a block captain on her street. Her husband, Travis, is involved with the loan approval committee, as well as volunteering his time on organized projects. A recipient of a volunteer service project to clean up the neighborhood was Norma Harris, a native Utahn, who has lived in her home for more than 65 years. She said NHS contacted her and said she had been selected to have her house painted by volunteers. "I was surprised and happy to see all of the people willing to help," Harris said. She has been a widow for 12 years and knew it would be more than she could manage financially to have her house professionally painted. Smith, who works at the Provo NHS, said any who are interested in volunteering or finding out how to begin the process of organizing neighborhood groups, may call the office at 375-5820.

Hurricane Edouard hurts tourism

Associated Press
NANTUCKET, Mass. — Hurricane Edouard shied away from land at the minute Monday, giving only a glancing blow to Cape Cod and island communities that had been emptied of thousands of holiday weekend tourists. The storm that once packed winds were blowing at a steady 140 mph was little more than an ugly day at the beach for the people who stayed. The storm failed to produce any serious damage, although 35,000 to 40,000 customers were without power early afternoon. A few houses and Hyannis fire station lost their roofs, and several boats were lost. While physical damage was relatively light, many businesses had closed on what is usually one of their best weekends of the year — the long weekend of summer. After driving almost straight north over the ocean toward Nantucket, the hurricane took a right turn early in the day. Its center got no more than 80 miles from Nantucket, and the wind gusts peaked at 90 mph. During the afternoon, gusts occasionally hit 60 mph. At 5 p.m., Edouard was headed northeast at 12 mph, and its center was about 225 miles southwest of Halifax, Nova Scotia. Its maximum sustained winds were down to 75 mph, barely strong enough to be still called a hurricane.

Congress returns for short session

Associated Press
Congress returns for a short session Monday. Majority Republicans have said it is clear they'll do what they want to avoid a replay of the two shutdowns that damaged them politically. "We're not putting poison into the bills," said Tony Franks, spokesman for House Speaker Newt Gingrich. He said that, Republicans hope to pass major immigration legislation to oust President Clinton — probably for his own good — and move politically-charged bills to curb government benefits for gay marriage partners, and for U.S. troops from serving under the international command. Franks and Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott also are expected to vote before the end of the session on Clinton's veto of legislation banning certain late-term abortions. Democrats have an agenda of their own, although it's unlikely to go far in a Congress dominated by Republicans. Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle said he would be prodding Clinton to confirm more of the judicial appointments that have been languishing for months. In addition, he said, he would be offering our action agenda: "personal security, health security and health security."

President Hinckley praises Legion's efforts

Associated Press

SLAKE CITY — Gordon B. Hinckley, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, says the American Legion deserve the nation's credit for their efforts to defend "liberty at great cost and sacrifice."

Hinckley urged them always to remember God and his promises.

Hinckley addressed more than 6,000 members of the legion and its auxiliary as part of a patriotic address held at the church's Tabernacle on Sunday.

"All is said and done, none of us can thank you for the service you have given in fighting a thousand battles and a series of wars," President Hinckley said.

The service was held in conjunction with the 78th National Convention of the American Legion, held here this week.

Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole is scheduled to address the convention Tuesday morning at the Tabernacle, and Reform Party candidate Ross Perot will speak Wednesday.

Hinckley stressed the importance of placing God at the center of the nation's life. He noted the motto "In God We Trust" that appears on U.S. currency, the wording of the country's Pledge of Allegiance and similar recognitions of God by George Washington in his first inaugural address given April 30, 1789.

The nation was built on such beliefs, President Hinckley said.

"Without acknowledgment of Deity, without recognition of the Almighty as the ruling power of the universe, the all-important element of personal and national accountability shrinks and dies," said President Hinckley.

"As you once knew so well, there are no atheists in foxholes," President Hinckley added. "In times of extremity, we plead for and put our trust in a power mightier than ourselves."

President Hinckley said the United States was founded on "an unequivocal trust in the power of the Almighty to guide and defend us."

He added that failing to recognize God has contributed in part to problems of teen pregnancy, abandoned families, failure to recognize the property rights of others and increased crime.

Hinckley recognized the legionnaires for lifting children out of poverty, helping them resist drugs and educating them.

"You have sponsored many organizations and many competitive contests, which have blessed the lives of uncounted thousands of the youth of the nation," he said.

Clinton attacks Dole's tax plan at De Pere rally

Associated Press

DE PERE, Wis. — Throwing himself confidently into the fall campaign, President Clinton celebrated Labor Day with a huge battleground-state rally Sunday and fresh attacks on Bob Dole's tax-cutting plans.

Addressing at least 25,000 people on the banks of the Fox River, Clinton said the $548 billion Republican tax plan would balloon interest rates and make mortgages, credit cards and car loans more expensive for the middle class.

The country simply cannot afford it and taxpayers would pay for their tax cuts in the end, declared Clinton. "Would you go to the bank yourself and borrow to give yourself a tax cut?" he asked the friendly and largely partisan crowd.

"No!" they shouted back.

"Then why would you hire someone to do it for you?" Clinton responded, issuing a not-so-veiled slap at Dole.

But in St. Louis, Dole characterized himself as a "bridge to lower taxes" and said his tax proposal — including an across-the-board 15 percent cut in the income tax rate — amounts to "one big plan (that) gives Americans back more of their hard-earned money."

"Anybody here doesn't want a tax cut, just raise your hand, we'll try to single you out," Dole challenged supporters at a rally in the shadows of the Gateway Arch in St. Louis. "No!" the partisan crowd roared back.

Dole and runningmate Jack Kemp called Clinton's bridge to the 21st century — a phrase the president has used frequently — "a toll bridge" for which "every inch of the way, you pay and pay and pay."

But Clinton's attacks on the Dole tax plan resonated with the Labor Day crowd that had packed a city park to hear the president in a state that is a bastion of swing voters. Clinton won Wisconsin in 1992, and polls show him running farther ahead in the state than nationally.

An ABC News poll conducted Wednesday and Thursday showed Clinton had edged upward as the Democratic National Convention ended, with 54 percent of registered voters preferring him in one tracking poll — 20 percentage points over Dole.

Another national poll, released Friday by CNN and USA Today but completed before Clinton's acceptance speech Thursday night, gave Clinton a 13-point edge.

History also is on his side: In 60 years of Gallup polls, every presidential candidate with a double-digit Labor Day lead went on to win.

"A year ago, if we were on this plane and you all told us we'd be in this position, we would be pleased," White House political director Doug Sosnik said aboard Air Force One.

The stadium-sized crowd at the De Pere rally outside Green Bay was perhaps the largest during a nine-day period in which Clinton has visited 10 battleground states.

Clinton reminded voters of his budget battle with Republicans that shut down the government in 1995. "If you thought that one was bad wait until you see what you get with the tax plan our opposition proposes," he said.

Dole, meanwhile, reminded the St. Louis rally that Clinton had promised a middle-class tax cut in 1992, but never came through. "Whatever happened to that? Now he says selected tax cuts. Do you believe him this time?" asked Dole.

Dole insisted he can trim the deficit while giving Americans more of their money back.

Utah to host 2002 Paralympic games

Associated Press

SLAKE CITY — Besides the Winter Games, the Salt Lake City Olympic Committee also will host the Paralympics for disabled athletes.

Costs of hosting the Paralympics range from about $15 million to $30 million, compared to $1 billion for the Winter Games. A bid for the Winter Games. A bid for the Winter Games. A bid for the Winter Games.

relations for the Atlanta Paralympic Organizing Committee.

However, the Atlanta Olympic organizing committee did contribute $5 million in cash and $10 million in services to the Paralympics, although the contribution came with restrictions on how and when the Paralympics could be marketed.

For example, Paralympics organizers were not only unable to sign some of the major corporate sponsors of the Olympics, but were prevented from soliciting money from competing companies.

Also, sales of merchandise featuring the 1996 Paralympics mascot, a wildy-colored bird named Blaze, were limited so as not to compete with items showcasing the Summer Games mascot, Izzy.

Concerns about the Atlanta Olympic organizers' lack of interest in the Paralympics helped persuade the International Olympic Committee (IOC) four years ago to require future Olympic cities to host the Paralympics.

Although the Paralympics have been held every Olympic year since 1960, they've only been held three times in the same city as the Olympics — in Seoul, South Korea in 1988, Barcelona, Spain in 1992, and Atlanta.

Utah's Olympic organizers bid for the Paralympics along with the 2002 Winter Games.

Bid documents submitted to the IOC promise that Utah will host a Paralympics March 3-13, a week after the Winter Games end.
